

FOR TRAVEL TO THE USA

Our 147TSA luggage lock is a good choice for securing your luggage when you want to fly to the United States.

The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) opens suitcases and other luggage, among other things, if something cannot be precisely defined during screening at the airport security check. For TSA locks, the employees have generic keys which fit these locks, so your bag lock will not be damaged. The case can then always be locked again in the usual fashion. Conventional padlocks are broken open by customs officials. This is allowed - only you will no longer have a lock to protect your suitcase from opportunistic thieves. The lock with plastic body and cable bracket is locked by a three-digit numerical code. It has an indicator that shows whether the lock has been opened using a TSA key.
